

GUEST of a GUEST

Everything You Need To Know This Week On New York's Art Scene

Permanent Link to Everything You Need To Know This Week On New York's Art Scene

In some (rare) instances, great art has the ability to transport its viewer to another world entirely. Lucky for us, the works in this week's round up can likely cross the universe and beyond. From Soviet-inspired spaceships at the New Museum to a Mars-like powder planet at David Zwirner Gallery, explore the entire spectrum of NYC's must-see shows.

Byung Hoon Choi, In One Stroke

An important figure in the modern history of Korean art, Byung Hoon Choi is unveiling his very first solo-exhibition on American soil, a moment as monumental as his sculptures. Eleven "benches" made of basalt stone take the stage as minimalist objects inspired by swift and singular brushstrokes of paint. Smooth and polished stone is juxtaposed against raw and unrefined rock to create a cultural balance (and tension) that somehow makes each piece a "whole."

When: February 27–March 29

Where: Friedman Benda, 515 W 26th St

